And there's a valid reason behind that; namely, Tomiki is widely known in the world of Aikido instead. What this means is that, although he was making great progress with Judo, his progress was way faster in Aikido. Namely, he achieved his 8th Dan in 1940; whereas he earned the 8th Dan in Judo just a year before his death - in 1978.

Tomiki Sensei believed that a "rationalization" of Aikido training, along the lines that Kano Sensei followed for Judo would make it more easily taught, particularly at the Japanese Universities. In addition, he believed that introducing an element of competition would serve to sharpen and focus the practice since it was no longer tested in real combat.
