More important for him was his encounter with a Yiddish theater troupe from Poland and a friendship with its leader, Yitskhok Löwy (also known as Jacques Levi; 1887-1942). Much evidence attests to the importance of this encounter for him; Kafka began to read histories of Yiddish literature and of the Jews, and attempted to learn Yiddish. In 1912, he arranged for a presentation of Yiddish dramatic readings by Löwy in Prague and himself delivered an introductory talk about the Yiddish ...

YIVO | Kafka, Franz

Yiddish theatre consists of plays written and performed primarily by Jews in Yiddish, the language of the Central European Ashkenazi Jewish community. The range of Yiddish theatre is broad: operetta, musical comedy, and satiric or nostalgic revues; melodrama; naturalist drama; expressionist and modernist plays. At its height, its geographical scope was comparably broad: from the late 19th ...

Kafka was antagonistic toward his heritage, but in late 1911, Kafka chanced upon a visiting Yiddish theater company at a local cafe, and was instantly transfixed. Although Kafka's close friend Max Brod, an observant Jew, teased him about it, he only became more obsessed.

Franz Kafka | My Jewish Learning

In his reading of The Trial, Suchoff highlights the black humor Kafka learned from the Yiddish theater, and he interprets The Castle in light of Kafka's involvement with the renewal of the Hebrew language. Finally, he uncovers the Yiddish and Hebrew meanings behind Kafka's "Josephine the Singer, or the Mouse-Folk" and considers the recent legal case in Tel Aviv over the possession of Kafka's missing manuscripts as a parable of the transnational meanings of his writing.
