Low and Slow. The primary difference between grilling and barbecuing is that grilling is cooking over a direct heat source on high heat for a short amount of time whereas barbecuing is cooking over an indirect heat source on low heat for a long period of time. While grilling works best on small cuts such as hamburgers, chops and steaks, barbecuing low and slow is best for larger cuts of meat ...

Bought this as a present for my partner. They absolutely love it. They are an amateur cook, but love the challenge and technicality that Low & Slow presents, with lots of technical background of how to treat and cook a great meaty meal. Have sampled the pork roast recipe from this book, and it had to be one of the best roasts I have ever had.
