In The Politics of Reality: Essays in Feminist Theory, American feminist philosopher Dr. Marilyn Frye compiles a collection of her essays (nine in total) pertaining to patriarchy, separatism, race, and oppression (among other topics). Overall, the arguments were candid, concise, and structured (although I do take issue with some of her conclusions).

in Feminist Theory, presents nine philosophical lectures: four on women's subordination, four on resistance and rebellion, one on revolution. Its approach combines a lesbian perspective with analytical philosophy of language. The major contributions of the book are its analysis of oppression, highly suggestive discussions of the roles of attention in knowledge and ignorance and in arrogance and love, a defense of political ...

Usually, we use the word "reality" to mean what seems to be, or facts filtered through a biased lens. But, it seems there should be one reality. It should not be dependent on people's perception of what reality is. Reality is not based on thoughts, feelings, and physical sensations. These three elements disrupt
