greatest problem in Horace is posed by his continual echoes of Latin and, more especially, Greek forerunners. The echoes are never slavish or imitative and are very far from precluding originality. For example, in one of his satires Horace wrote what looks at first like a realistic account of a journey made to Brundisium (Brindisi, on Italy's

The idea is that the friction of the soil as the seed grows up helps to pull off the seed coat. Therefore, if the seed is not planted deep enough, the seed coat won't come off well as it grows. Others feel that when a seed won't come off, this indicates that there was too little moisture in the soil or too little humidity in the surrounding ...

The challenge is finding a method for thickening the gravy post-braise that won't cause lumps or dirty another pan. Try this instead: Make a paste of softened butter and flour and whisk it into the braising liquid after braising. This paste is similar to roux — the butter coating the flour prevents lumps — but goes by the name beurre manié.
