Baby vegetables will not go as far at the table as full-size vegetables grown to maturity. To ensure a continuous harvest, make successive sowings throughout the growing season. Grow crops of the same height and size close together to avoid shading out shorter crops or having roots compete for space and nutrients.

Growing Baby Vegetables - Harvest to Table

Start with 1-2 tablespoons of baby food, two to three per day when you begin feedings and slowly work your way up to around 4-5 tablespoons per feeding as your baby grows. Hold off on finger foods until they are closer to 8 months or 9 months old and can do a pincer grasp to grab food.
