Joyce Race And Empire Cultural

In this first full-length study of race and colonialism in the works of James Joyce, Vincent J. Cheng argues that Joyce wrote insistently from the perspective of a colonial subject of an oppressive empire, and demonstrates how Joyce's texts constitute a significant political commentary on British imperialism in Ireland and on colonial discourses and ideologies in general.

Inauthentic: The Anxiety over Culture and Identity: Cheng ...

'Inspired by post-colonial theory, Vincent Cheng's Joyce, Race and Empire argues the case for Joyce's subversion of predominant ideologies of race and ethnicity. The book locates itself as a corrective to a critical legacy that has focussed on Joyce's styles and away from the ideological discussions contained in the Joycean texts.'

Joyce, race, and empire (Book, 1995) [WorldCat.org]

The text shows how through the recreation of primordial and perennial cultural and ethnic propensity of Ireland, such a nation can be forged, and thus the reality of experience can be encountered. The paper tries to contextualize the modernist text, A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man by James Joyce in the trajectory of nationalism and attempts to posit it as a cultural text that foregrounds the forging of the 'uncreated'.

Forging a New Nation: A Study of a Portrait of the Artist ...

Joyce, Race, and Empire flies in the face of traditional readings of the great canons of English literature. The controversy over Cheng's book reflects a larger debate brewing in academe – one that pits traditional views of literary works against contemporary attempts to read them in the context of cultural politics and gender issues.

Currently, I am researching and analyzing the roles played by gender and race in the cultural discourses on the Spanish Empire at the fin de siglo, with a special emphasis on the Philippines. My book in progress on this subject is tentatively titled Family Troubles: Spain and the Philippines in the Late Modern Empire.
