Amid all the confusion arrives Marantz's new SA-1152 Reference, a moderately priced ($3499.99) player aimed at enthusiasts of two-channel SACD who are looking for a reasonably priced upgrade from a budget-priced CD player, and at audiophiles still unwilling to buy a turntable but who want to start collecting the classical and jazz recordings that comprise the bulk of titles currently available ...

People who have encountered the SA-1152 often have just one thing to say: ... It offers a smooth migration path to a higher quality sound, as all existing CDs can be played on the SA-CD player. SA-CD is based on the Direct Stream Digital ... Marantz developed its own discrete circuit boards to replace standard IC's.

There's no doubt that the Marantz SA-1152 looks the part. It's a substantial, heftily attractive player which appears engineered to reassure those who may go a bit weak-kneed at dropping two and a half grand on a CD player. "Don't worry," it seems to say, "I'm worth that in base metal alone."

The SA-1152 uses an aluminum SACDM-1 transport designed and built by Marantz that works beautifully and has a very expensive feel to it. The disc drawer opens and closes with silk-like smoothness. It loads quickly compared to the early Sony and Marantz SACD players, but still slower than a straight redbook player.

It loads quickly compared to the early Sony and Marantz SACD players, but still slower than a straight redbook player. Comparisons. I just happened to have two other SACD players in the house at the same time as the SA-1152. One was Marantz's own Limited edition SA-Ki-Pearl at $3,000 and the other was the Sony SCD-XA5400ES with the Vacuum State GmbH Terra Firma Lite Clock Upgrade at around $3,500, depending on what price you get the Sony for.

Like Marantz's SM-1151 Reference stereo power amplifier, which I reviewed in May 2008, their SA-1152 Reference SACD/CD player offers a level of build quality seldom seen for $3500. Its sound will be more to the liking of those who prefer warmth and harmonic richness to the highest level of detail resolution, which can often entail suffering through recordings that are teeth-gnashingly bright ...

Ken's first products for Marantz were loudspeakers and it wasn't until the first KI Signature CD player in the mid-1980s that he switched to electronics. His guru legend began when he made some changes to an existing model (CD63) that was not proving very successful and the company was in danger of having a warehouse full of machines that would be soon superseded.

In my review in the February 2009 issue of Marantz's SA-1152 SACD/CD player ($3599.99), I said that "buying [an SACD] player in 2009 necessitates an act of faith similar to the one turntable buyers faced back in 1992." The negative reaction to this from the besieged SACD community was as intense as it was irrational.

This new Marantz player seems to be the best yet from Marantz. On 2 channel CD / SACD player it's definitely superior to my previous SA-1251. The treble reproduction is amazingly detailed yet ultra smooth and free from grain or glare and the midrange is the best I've heard from CD.

The new Marantz SA-1552 Super Audio CD player is the "low end" of the Reference line behind the highly regarded flagship SA-751 and the SA-1152 SACD. The Reference line is elegantly styled - in the case of the 1552 a sculpted champagne curved façade faceplate that glows blue from hidden LCD lighting giving the illusion that the main display "floats" off the body.
